

The United Nations Association of San Francisco—in cooperation with the Masters of International Relations (MIR) program of San Francisco State University—presents one of a series of programs addressing the Report of the UN’s High-Level Panel on Threats, Challenges, and Change.

Should the UN Allow Member States to Engage in Pre-emptive Strikes?

A PANEL DISCUSSION

Dr. Claviel of San Francisco State University

Dr. Pavel Lutomski, Stanford University

Moderator: Gail Karpinski-Cornell,
United Nations Association of San Francisco

Thursday, April 21, 7–9 pm (free)

San Francisco State University, Building HSS, Room 362

(Street parking is available on 19th Avenue after 6 pm.)

The UN’s High-Level Panel notes that the issue of nuclear proliferation is one of the major challenges facing world leaders today. The international community, it says, “is approaching a point at which the erosion of the non-proliferation regime could become irreversible and result in a cascade of proliferations.” For more information call (415) 824-3129 or see una-sf.org.
